Reviews

This is a wonderful ledger of unheralded heroes who don't make billions or blow anything up. They are quiet, intelligent and caring Iowans. They have journeyed through hard times but sustained their love of place. They are creating an inspiring culture of farm and commerce and community, where human and land can be in enduring harmony. Every American worried about the planet should use this as scripture for the future.

— Hugh Sidey, writer, Time magazine, native of Greenfield, Iowa

This book is a must-read for those who conclude that small towns are dying as well as those who cherish small-town life. Renewing the Countryside - Iowa is a human parade of rural success stories: people who are adaptable, resourceful, and determined to find a way to live in harmony with the land and profit from it.

— Christie Vilsack, First Lady of Iowa

Renewing the Countryside - Iowa reminds us that, along with its world-renowned mixture of soil and climate, Iowa's strengths lie in its people. Here are the compelling stories of farmers, business people, public servants and citizens, told in a way that reflects their belief in a better future for their communities.

— Catherine E. Woteki, Dean, College of Agriculture, Iowa State University

Iowan Aldo Leopold, in A Sand County Almanac, focused on the concept of harmony between people and the land. Iowa is a “beautiful land” inhabited by beautiful people. It is this harmony that gives beauty to both our countryside and our citizens. Renewing the Countryside - Iowa reveals the ingenuity of Iowans and their love of the beauty of our land and our heritage—a heritage based on working with and understanding the balance of harmony.

— Robert D. Ray, former Governor of Iowa
